THE PERFECT IDIOT

NOV. 18, 1960

The high-school gang just hated Dan, the boy-wonder. They'd heard about his high I.Q. and they despised his Smart-Me! Dumb-You! attitude. But they had to turn to him when Puff, the hope of the school, was disqualified from all athletic events. Dan is elected to tutor Puff, but he has problems of his own. He offers to coach Puff if all the gang will rally round him long enough to satisfy his parents, who are unwilling to send him to college as long as he's so unpopular in high school. Dan goes to work with his hypnotic suggestion invention and turns Puff into an above-average student. Hilarious and complicated developments arise as a soap-manufacturer gets interested in the hypnotic box; Puff loses all athletic interests; Dan finds Linda more interesting than college; and Linda teaches the inexperienced Dan just how to say goodnight after a date.

On September 16 the seniors decided that that freshmen had gone to school long enough without being initiated. Early that bright, sunny, fall day the freshmen were taken to a locker room; here they were painted and dressed as freshmen being initiated should be.

Those long-suffering freshmen climaxed their day by performing in an afternoon initiation program planned for them by the merciless seniors.
